SocialFi Network

Metus is a community-run SocialFi Network, where each participant can easily monetize their data, and get rewarded for activity.
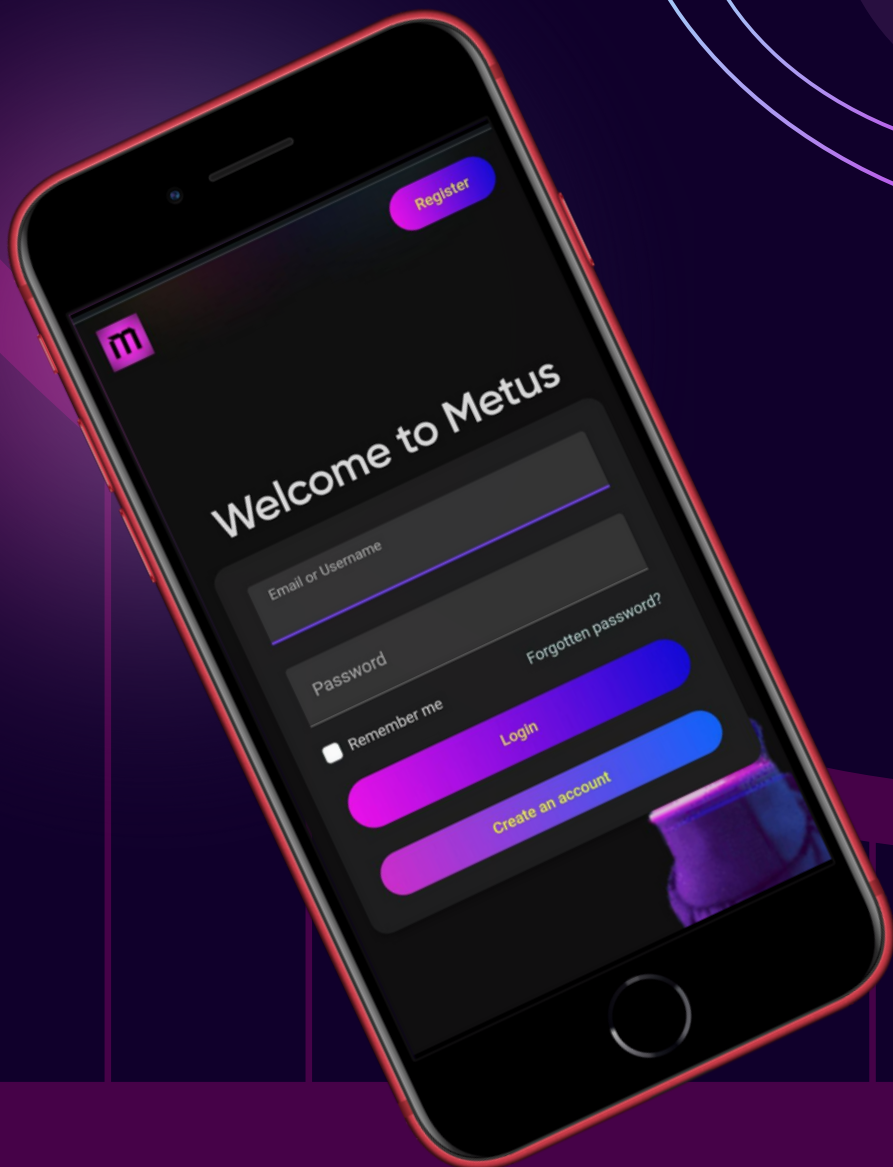

THE PROBLEM

Every day, over half the world's population, spends an average of 2 hours and 27 minutes on social media; however, the attention, interactions, engagement, and generated data are monetized by a few centralized entities and their shareholders.

The current social media landscape is referred to as Web2 – a platform where users are the product, content is king, and centralization is the norm.

The key ideological trigger for the development of SocialFi was the emergence of the concept of creative earnings: anyone can earn money by attracting an audience and creating both professional and non-professional content.
